

Health Investment Fundamentals

Alex Bernier

About

Creavinci Education tailors a step-by-step journey focused on your health priority and adjusted based on your feedback. Students keep track of their lessons on a private page where they can other access tools and resources to further their progress. Tuition includes an individual student page and premium access to the web portal.

The greatest wealth is health, said a Roman poet. The metaphor persists two thousand and some years later as half of America's adult population battles with one or more chronic diseases, and the global healthcare debt exceeds the trillions of dollars.

Mobile technology connects users to ideas and knowledge like never before in history. The power is in your hands to make the most of the greatest revolution in communication since the printed press. Health Investment is an online course designed to educate consumers in pursuit of an optimal lifestyle on the financial aspect of the journey.

The 5 Investor Archetypes

Take a second to remember the first time you invested money in your health. Many joined a gym or bought sneakers; some picked up a fitness magazine filled with workout secrets and pictures of their dream physique. Now, was that initial investment enough to accomplish your goals?

The answer is no for the many of us who are still engaged in the process today. There had to be another health-investment, then a third and even a fourth. You hire a personal trainer when you realize how complex the body and a gym can be, or buy a set of dumbbells for the basement because the shoes aren't enough. That magazine program turns into a weekend seminar with the professional who wrote it. Your financial decisions evolve as your body progresses over time.

Distinct patterns emerge amongst health-investors, as with all branches of the human nature. These recurring traits are influenced by personality more than investment potential. Someone with a massive wealth might spend less on health than the average worker. Others with few resources go all-in to initiate a major lifestyle shift and grow their funds along with it. There are countless potential scenarios.

Sun Tzy taught you will win one hundred battles if you know your enemy and yourself in The Art Of War. The same principle applies to health investments. Make the right monetary choices with an awareness of who you are and what you need. Here are the five investor archetypes typically encountered:

The 5 Investor Archetypes

1. Do It Myself

The first archetype prefers solitude throughout the journey. These lone wolves learn and apply things on their own because they need to be in control. They work at their pace and will only seek the help of others when they find themselves at a dead end.

Pros

The Do-It-Myself archetype is independent. Solitude provides greater freedom to experiment and find a winning combination. Results satisfy to a higher degree because they stem from their research.

Cons

Nobody can see everything, especially in the context of health. They are limited to what they know, and that can be a fatal flaw if left unchecked. The process requires dedication, patience, and consumes time like a black hole.

Optimal Health-Investments

This archetype benefits most from education platforms like seminars, online courses, and books. Mobile technology allows them to collect and store important health data to monitor their progress. They also invest in equipment to build their private workout lab at home or the office.

2. Tell Me What To Do

The second archetype needs someone else to tell them what to do because of other obligations and interests that require an external source of health education. They hire a wide range of professionals to do the dirty work for them.

Pros

The process saves time and reaps the benefits of human interactions while furthering their health and education.

The 5 Investor Archetypes

Cons

They can only be as good as their teachers, and regular work with professionals can get expensive over time.

Optimal Health-Investments

Professional services.

3. Trend Adepts

The third archetype follows the lights; they invest in popularity. All their decisions root in the chatter around a product or service.

Pros

New trends can be great. Evolution is necessary.

Cons

New trends can be disastrous. Some things are better left the way they are.

Optimal Health-Investments

Trend followers invest in popular products and professional services.

4.All Eggs In One Basket

The fourth archetype is similar to the previous two, except all their resources go to one guru.

Pros

The results can be remarkable if they invest in the right basket.

Cons

They can only be as good as their guru.

The 5 Investor Archetypes

Optimal Health-Investments

As per their scriptures.

5. Professionals

The fifth archetype is a professional who manages the health and lifestyle of his clients on top of their own. Their bread and butter depends on the image they convey and the results produced. They must not only invest in themselves but also in their business.

Pros

Health and wealth gains as you help others.

Cons

The process is expensive and time-consuming, requires dedication and sacrifices for a life of health care.

Optimal Health-Investments

Continuing education is the most valuable investment for this archetype. Equipment is essential, as are all other costs of starting a healthcare or fitness business.

Do you recognize yourself in any of them?

Create A Mixed Education Database

Follow at least 100 professionals of all corners of the industry to create a mixed education database before you make a major financial decisions. Get the most out of this online pool of knowledge by having access to all health outlooks, at all times.

The different perspectives will contradict each other. The point is not to believe in a story, but to apply what appeals to you and note the impact (or lack of) on your body. Sometimes a tiny bit of wisdom is all it takes to make significant changes. Everyone has something to teach you about the complexity of health.

Don't know where to look?

Access the Creavinci Web Portal to connect to the world of health and fitness.

Enter

Financial Advisors Are Assets For Good Health

Many investment strategies can meet your budget and needs, from products to a broad range of services and other unknown fees, so how much do you estimate the price of good health this year?

You must know your buying potential to answer the question accurately. That's when financial advisors come into play. These professionals are trained to account for critical variables to determine your investment limits, display all your options, and help you see the big money picture.

Lack of sustainable health progress might be the symptom of a financial mishap; Perhaps you are putting all your eggs in the same basket or losing resources on the wrong solutions. You might be under-investing in your health, too. Only a detailed outlook of your personal situation can expose the leak.

You need your numbers to succeed, so have a trustworthy financial consultant guide you to them.

A Financial Advisor Mapped Out My Potential, Now What?

A financial advisor will map out your health investment potential, that critical value in your quest for a stronger body and mind. Your resources determine the next logical step. Some people invest 30 to 100 dollars a month in a gym membership; others 500$ worth of weekly professional services, or 55,000$ of home gym equipment and required renovations. There is a strategy for everybody.

You know how much, now you have to figure out the best move. The opportunities are plenty, from products to services, education, workout gear, and mobile applications, or patience to save up for a higher price point item. But which one is right for you?

What a time to be alive. You have a wealth of knowledge at your disposal; More information and real-time feedback on strategies than ever before in the history of health or investments for anyone linked to the big invisible network.

Do your homework.

Online Education

Want to turn your wealth into health?

Learn to identify optimal health investment opportunities for your goals and create a solution that suits your budget, at your pace, anywhere in the world.

Enroll Now