Introduction

It will be a historic vote on 23rd June 2016 in the United Kingdom: do the citizens of the United Kingdom wish to grasp the unique (and perhaps only) opportunity to free themselves from the clutches of the European Union, an organisation run by unelected, unqualified and unaccountable bureaucrats? History will tell.

An eye-opener may be the decision of the Swiss Government on 3rd March 2016 to withdraw the application to join the European Union.<sup>1</sup> The National Council, the Lower house of the Swiss Parliament, voted by 126 to 46, to formally withdraw the application, 24 years after the country first applied for membership of what was then the European Community (EC).

The withdrawal motion will later go to the Council of States but this is expected to be a mere formality in view of what the Upper House has indicated. The main reasons as stated were that Switzerland could not agree to abandon its independence and Switzerland could never accept that the Court of the EU would take priority over the Swiss Supreme Court.

Switzerland had in earlier negotiations asked if the European Union planned to become 'supranational' and develop into the 'United States of Europe'. The answer had been that that was not the plan 'in the short term', an answer that made the Swiss interest wane.<sup>2</sup>

The representative of the Swiss People's Party, Mr Lukas Reimann, proposing the motion, stated in 2016 that it was high time to formally withdraw the application and that Switzerland should no longer be treated as a country that wants to join the EU. He also gave a good-luck message to the people of Britain who wish the quit the EU bloc:

'This is a clear and historical message from the Swiss Parliament to British voters. We wish you the best of luck for Brexit. These days, Switzerland is called Britzerland because Swiss people support the BREXIT'.
